The carpenter himself was a very kind and gentle man, and he always made sure to gift his toys to the village children on their birthdays.

One day, news spread that the king was coming to visit the village. The carpenter was very excited at the prospect of meeting the king and showing him his magical toys. However, when the king arrived, he was not interested in the carpenter's toys at all. In fact, he demanded that the carpenter make a new toy for his own child.
