

The snail and the rabbit: a tale of friendship

One day a snail was crawling along, minding its own business. A rabbit saw the snail and asked, "What are you doing?"

"I'm crawling," the snail replied.

"Why are you going so slow?" the rabbit asked. "You should be running!"

The snail explained that it couldn't run because it didn't have legs. The rabbit felt sorry for the snail and offered to help.

The rabbit grabbed the snail and started running as fast as it could. But the snail kept falling off.

Finally, the rabbit had an idea. It curled up into a ball and rolled, with the snail clinging to its fur.

The snail was safe and sound, and it thanked the rabbit for its help. The two friends went their separate ways, but they knew they could always count on each other if they needed help.

1. What was the snail doing when the rabbit saw it?
2. Why did the rabbit ask the snail what it was doing?
3. What did the snail reply?
4. Why did the rabbit want the snail to hurry up?
5. How did the rabbit try to help the snail?
6. What did the rabbit finally do to help the snail?
7. Was the snail successful in its journey?
8. How did the two friends feel after their adventure?

